BASE-BALL MATTERS.

The Ludlows Gain the Fletory Over the Reds-Organisation of New Clubs.

The Ludlow Grounds were visited or Saturday afternoon by the largest crowd of lovers of base-ball that was ever assembled, this year, to witness the contest between the St. Louis Reds and the Ludiows. The game was called at 4 o'clock. Mr. R. S. Crandall was umpire, the Reds going to the bat, but took the field without making a tally. The Ludlows in the first inning scored two runs, made by Mason and Warner. The Reds then went to the bat and made one run. In the third inning the Reds were whitewashed, and the Ludlows, by magnificent batting, scored three more. The fourth inning was a mutual whitewash. The Ludlows in the fifth inning did some more good batting, and added four runs to their score. In the seventh inning Hountz and Croft each scored one for the Reds.

the Reds. Croft, after the fifth inning, took the Croft, after the fifth inning, took the place of Morgan, and by his pitching prevented the Ludlows from making another score. The playing of Williams and Taylor, the pitcher and catcher of the Ludlows, was exceedingly flue,

An Argonaut of '49.

An elderly, bald-headed gentleman in vaded the waiting room of the Mayor's office this morning and asked the privioffice this morning and asked the privilege of interviewing the head of the municipal government upon the subject of transportation. He began narrating some of his troubles to one of the clerks, before the interview was granted or refused, and something like the following statement was caught in the left ear of the Journal man. It is not particularly interesting, neither is it extraordinarily dull or flat, but as it is about the only thing in the news line that could be noised out in the City Hall, its insertion is imperatively demanded:

When the California fever ravaged the country in 1849, John J. Carson, then a young man of twenty-five, was smitten with it. He lived in Lincoln county, Tennessee, and the fever struck him

Tennessee, and the fever struck him hard. He was single, had no one to love, none to caress, and so, packing up a few necessary things, he struck out for the land of Eureka and earthquakes to seek land of Eureka and earthquakes to seek his fortune. Once there he went to mining and by dint of much digging and after many hard knocks, succeeded in accumulating sufficient dust to put him in easy circumstances. Then bad luck overtook him, and the savings of years were swept away like chaff. Nothing deunted, he pulled off his coat and went back to the shovel, pick and pan, and was again rewarded with a goodly sized pile of gold dust. But the fates had marked him for their own, and John Carson found himself strapped. He went marked him for their own, and John Carson found himself strapped. He went to Nevada county, but bad luck followed close to his heels.

The diamond fields of Arizona were being much talked of and John took a jaunt in that direction. So did bad luck, for afteen months ago while skirmishing around in search for the precious stones a gang of Apache Indians took him in. He was a prisoner with this tribe eight months. Being able to speak Spanish, a tongue familiar to most of the Indians, he so worked himself into their good graces as to be allowed some privileges. Seven months ago he started out with a Seven months ago he started out with a squad of the tribe on a horse-stealing ex-pedition, and the first opportunity he got, he sloped and turned his face to the got, he sloped and turned his face to the States. Assistance was rendered him as far as this city by friendly Indians and white people. And now, at the age of fity-four Jonn J. Carson finds himself feeble, worn in body and broken in spirit, begging his way back to the old State from which he started twenty-six years ago a vigorous, ambitious man. He hopes to meet friends of his youth in Memphis, who will kindly smooth his way down the shady side of the hill and see that in his few remaining days he see that in his few remaining days be has the necessaries of life.—St. Louis Journal.

A German engaged in collecting and shipping bones, while in pursuit of his occupation the other afternoon, a few miles from Buffalo, on the Kansas Pacific, was attacked by a small party of Indians. They circled around him with a good deal of ostentation and kept up a steady fusilade; but although there were thirteen bullet holes in his hat and clothes, he escaped without a scratch to his skin. He was armed with a sixteen, shooter, and he thinks ohe or two redskins carried off some of his lead in their bodies. He never stopped walking, exbodies. He never stopped walking, except long enough to fire, and kept up this sort of a fight for five miles.—Denver News.
